Article I Legislative Branch

Under Article I Section 8 Clause 17 the Legislature is authorized to create a separate entity entitled UNITED STATES. United States Code Title 28 Section 3002 (15) defines UNITED STATES AS A CORPORATION. This Corporation has ultimate authority over all territories under its jurisdiction and exercises Legislative, Executive, and Judicial powers over such.

For each of the subentries listed below, act is sometimes substituted for statute.

Black's Law Dictionary 8th edition.

"It is not a little remarkable that our common law knew no process whereby a man could pledge his body or liberty for payment of a debt....Under Edward I, the tide turned. In the interest of commerce a new form of security, the so-called 'statute merchant' was invented, which gave the creditor power to demand the seizure and imprisonment of his debtor's body," 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 596-97 (2d ed. 1899).

constitution—4. parliamentary law. A governing document adopted by an organization for its internal governance and its external dealings. • The constitution may be an organization's most authoritative governing document, but if the organization has also received a charter or adopted articles of incorporation or association, then the constitution is subordinate to them. If the organization has also adopted bylaws, then the bylaws are subordinate to (and usu. more easily amended than) the constitution. The constitution and bylaws are sometimes contained in a single document.

Administrative Law. The law governing the organization and operation of administrative agencies (including executive and independent agencies) and the relations of administrative agencies with the legislature, the executive, the judiciary, and the public. • Administrative law is divided into three parts: (1) the statutes endowing agencies with powers and establishing rules of substantive law relating to those powers; (2) the body of agency-made law, consisting of administrative rules, regulations, reports, opinions containing findings of fact, and orders; and (3) the legal principles governing the acts of public agents when those acts conflict with private rights. Black's Law Dictionary 8th Edition

Governmental representation in an administrative capacity of any kind can be considered administrative agency. The president is an administrative agent whose enabling statute is the federal Constitution. The thirteen executive departments reporting to the president are administrative agencies. For example, the DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE is a cabinet-level executive department, but it functions as the administrative agency that addresses the legal concerns of the U.S. government and its people. The departments housed within the Department of Justice, such as the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, are also administrative agencies, and they have procedures and rules of their own.

"Congress also has power, within certain limits, to create what are called...Article I tribunals....These Article I tribunals are really akin to administrative agencies; that is, the 'judges' do not have any constitutionally guaranteed lifetime tenure and protection from salary diminution; they are not governed by the case or controversy limitation of Article III....At the present time, Article I courts include territorial courts, certain courts in the District of Columbia, courts martial, and legislative courts and administrative agencies that adjudicate public rights." John E. Nowak & Ronald D. Rotunda, Constitutional Law 22-23 (4th ed. 1991).

Administrator 1. A person who manages or heads a business, public office, or agency.

"When acting to enforce a statute and its subsequent amendments to the present date, the judge of the municipal court is acting as an administrative officer and not in a judicial capacity; courts in administering or enforcing statutes do not act judicially, but merely ministerially". Thompson v. Smith, 154 SE 583.

"A judge ceases to sit as a judicial officer because the governing principle of administrative law provides that courts are prohibited from substituting their evidence, testimony, record, arguments, and rationale for that of the agency. Additionally, courts are prohibited from substituting their judgment for that of the agency. Courts in administrative issues are prohibited from even listening to or hearing arguments, presentation, or rationale." ASIS v. US, 568 F2d 284.
